Foreword

The year 2016-17 was an exciting year at NCAS. This year NCAS was faced with several new opportunities as well as challenges which gave us new experiences and through which we have advanced our abilities. This year has been marked with several milestones for NCAS. The organisation renewed ties with several old partners and friends and also collaborated with new organisations and networks.

Our efforts in the past year focused on building functional capacities in research and training, revitalising advocacy capacity building programme, and strengthening work on Adivasi rights through the Adivasi Resource Centre programme. Succinctly put, in the year 2016-17, we have been able to materialise the efforts to consolidate NCAS’s position as a premiere advocacy resource centre. The training, research and networking efforts were streamlined in order to develop a concrete foundation for the future course of action for NCAS.

We do acknowledge the need for updating the advocacy strategies with changing times and are focusing more on it.

We welcome your feedback and suggestions.

In Solidarity,

Amit Narkar
Executive Director
The rights-based perspectives and the issues of marginalised communities have always been at the core of NCAS’s Advocacy training workshops. In the year 2016-17 several organisations invited NCAS to conduct Advocacy Capacity Building workshops. Many of these workshops were thematic and also aimed at enhancing skills and building perspectives to be able to effectively apply advocacy tools and strategies. NCAS also actively engaged with the young minds through a Summer Course on Advocacy. The workshops largely focused on Food, Nutrition, Gender Equality, Child Rights and Women’s Protection.

Through the course of regular workshops and interactions, the bargaining potential as well as local leadership skills were improved. NCAS decided to engage with the issues of Particularly Vulnerable tribal groups (PVTGs) in the states of Odisha, Maharashtra and Chhattisgarh by getting involved with one local grassroots organisation in each of the states. A mapping of these areas was done and the organisations were identified. NCAS initiated work with them which will continue in 2017-18.
